Corey had always been a gifted artist. Even before he was 5 years old, he could draw people, animals, and cars with amazing accuracy. As he grew older, his skills improved, and he was always impressing his teachers and friends with his drawings and paintings. When he graduated from high school, everyone assumed that he would go to a famous art school and make a career out of being an artist. There was just one problem. His father did not want Corey to be an artist. It was his wish that his son choose a different profession such as law or accounting. In fact, Corey's father told him that he would not pay his tuition if he chose to study art. Corey was very sad...
