

Organ Transplants

Many people believe that when an organ transplant takes place, part of the donor's personality travels with the organ. Most people are strongly against receiving an organ from a killer. They'd be very happy to receive an from a "good" person. Some patient who had undergone organ transplant believe that they now had a part of the personality of their organ donors, including some memories and experiences of the donor. One in three organ transplant patients believe they have some aspects of their donor's personality according to research.
